GAHTS

Human trafficking doesn't stop at the border.

Why should our knowledge?

The Global Association of Human Trafficking Scholars:

Is dedicated to an international partnership with an understanding of the historical, political and cultural components of human trafficking as they influence research, policy, and activism in each respective global community.

Approaches scholarly discourse with a respect for pluralistic views while steadfastly pursuing social justice for all, regardless of racial or gender identity, sexual orientation, nationality, socioeconomic status, age, or ability.

Encourages the collaboration and integrity of innovative research-based approaches to inform policy, advocacy, and activism.

Asserts clear ethics grounded in the importance of moving the knowledge base forward by producing high-quality research that goes beyond institutional barriers to be accessible to all.

Are you a researcher, journalist, practitioner, survivor, or just looking to learn more about how multi-disciplinary fields are addressing human trafficking?
